The website of a Russian government propaganda outlet, which focuses on social media. In addition to its broadcasting channels, RT was previously known as Russia Today.

Ownership and Financing

RT is financed by the Government of the Russian Federation. The organization is registered as a non-profit organization. The funding is provided by the Federal Inside Media Fund, which is within the Ministry of Culture of Russia. The network also receives funding from private companies and wealthy individuals. RT is also supported by the Russian government's propaganda efforts, which include the creation of so-called "Russia Today" media outlets.

Content

RT is known for its controversial coverage of news events, particularly those related to political and cultural issues. The network's coverage often includes interviews with government officials, experts, and other individuals. RT also produces documentaries, films, and other media content.

Transparency

RT is known for its controversial coverage of news events, particularly those related to political and cultural issues. The network's coverage often includes interviews with government officials, experts, and other individuals. RT also produces documentaries, films, and other media content.

History

RT grew out of a 2002 deal between the US government and Russia. The network began broadcasting in 2002 and quickly gained a following among a limited audience. However, RT's popularity increased significantly in recent years, particularly in the Western Hemisphere.

Writing Credits

Writing Credits

Left to Right

1. Demetrios Katsavounidis
2. Monica J. Brodie
3. Anna Davy and Very Merry

Send Feedback to Newsroom

Click Here

Sources

Ownership and Financing

Content

History

https://www.bbc.co.uk/religion/religiondocu/10170176

Transparency